Top Lessons and Actions from April - June 2026

April 2026 Top 3 Lessons:

1. Do nothing when the urge hits. The old loop breaks in those seconds, not in a new plan. Pain is a feature of life. Suffering is refusing it. Train and build evidence. A thought is weather you watch, not a command you obey.
2. Fear mediocrity enough to work hard, but stay unbothered when it doesn't work out. Holding both keeps you from becoming a broken spirit or thinking that you are not enough when shit happens. You, through Christ, are enough.
3. Seeds don't matter if they don't germinate. A high can lay them and still fail to nurture them, so keep the balance: watering the work and having fun. Put your skill points into nurturing, and don't mistake the spark for the harvest.

Top 3 Actions:

1. Make the "Firestone era" work on paper. The house goal has two routes: one year with three jobs or two with two. Spend the next hour comparing actual take-home pay, housing costs, savings, and hours left for recovery, basketball, and people. My jaw notes already allow for disruption. Choose a pace that funds the life you want without assuming full capacity throughout.
2. Water one seed before planting another. The gummy log captures the tradeoff: good flow, then losing the assignment. Pick one useful output from the Claude/Legacy work, name what "done" means, and give it a clear-headed work block before more setup or idea collecting. When the phone or smoking urge interrupts, try your own 10-second pause, then the next five-minute step. Test what helps you finish, not just feel inspired.
3. Let "do my best; adjust" outrank "all in or all out." You want more concerts, connection, and comedy reps, yet the open mic is still "one day." Record the one-minute voice memo before polishing another system. Then sign up for a comedy class or find an open mic I believe that I can do. I do not need settled conviction to gather real XP.

May 2026 Top 3 Lessons:

1. Face the truth and trust it. Tension and friction when organizing are an old means of protection; truth may hurt in the short term, but in the long run it's the only thing that keeps you free.
2. Emotion and expression cannot exist in a hyper-analytical state. You do not want to over-analyze the playground while you are on it; use dedicated practice times instead.

3. Don’t let the to-do list be an idol. A successful day is communing with God moment by moment, asking the Holy Spirit to guide each moment; it’s okay to be tired, rest, stop, and pray.

Top 3 Actions:

1. “Doing the work” ≠ making it look pretty. “Distill before you include” and “learn and apply, not hoard” point to the same next move: spend the next 25 minutes using one existing note or plan to produce a real result, not another refinement. Choose an obligation that is still live; the movers and Quest entries are already under Completed Tasks. Enough collecting to begin.
2. Practice off the playground; be present on it. Your journal names the tension: wanting expression and fun while analyzing the experience. Give one skill, like talking with your hands, a short practice slot. In your next conversation, put attention on the other person rather than grading your performance. Let the interaction be an interaction, not another rehearsal.
3. “No finish line” means rest cannot wait for an empty list. I name communion with God, not task completion, as a successful day. Before taking on the next task, pause: pray, notice your energy, then choose work or rest. Try one deliberate stopping point with work still unfinished. The integration is letting that count, not adding another spiritual checkbox.

June 2026 Top 3 Lessons:

1. Shift from the problem to gratitude. Worry comes from the wrong questions; look at what God has already given you, not at what’s missing or at someone else’s blessing, and you’ll find things you didn’t know you had.
2. You are called to problems because you are called to people. They go hand in hand, so don’t run from that calling; compassion for someone else’s problem is the miracle fuel, so meet them where they are.
3. Do less. Most things don’t work. Boring is not an exemption, not novel, necessary, and not pleasurable now, so extrapolate the future benefit into today instead of treating it with contempt.

Top 3 Actions:

1. Pick one fruit, not four more hour-blocks. “Anything but NOT Everything” is the useful constraint on “merging purpose and profit.” Spend your next hour making one small, useful thing for one real person. Decide what response would earn it another hour. Learn by putting it to use, not by settling your whole direction first.
2. All in on the practice, flexible on the dose. “#NoLukewarm” and “take it slow [I’m healing]” need not compete. Choose one necessary routine already in your life and define its lower-energy version. “Boring ≠ exempt” can mean returning consistently, not pushing maximally. Make the next repetition doable without making pace a verdict on commitment.

3. Give compassion a person and a follow-through. “Meet people where they are” plus “DO NOT be so quick to come and go” points toward staying, not just giving. Ask one person what would actually help; offer something you already have and agree when to check back. You can act on the loaves you have without solving the whole problem.

Top 3 Actions from before, when they were still lessons:

1. Anything, but NOT everything. Pick one fruit. “Do less” and “merging purpose and profit” deserve a shared experiment, not four more daily hour-blocks. Spend your next hour making one small thing useful enough to put in someone’s hands. Define what response would justify another hour. You can learn by doing before you feel ready.
2. All in can still mean taking it slow. “#NoLukewarm” sits beside “I’m healing.” Choose one already-practiced routine, such as movement or meal prep, and set a repeatable version for lower-energy days. “Boring ≠ exempt” needn’t mean maximum intensity. Commit to the practice without making pace a test of commitment.
3. Give compassion an address. “Meet people where they are” and “DO NOT be so quick to come and go” point beyond another gratitude note. Choose one person, ask what would actually help, and offer one specific thing you already have to give. You know enough to begin with a conversation, not a grand solution.
